Much Ado About Nothing
by William Shakespeare Unicorn Theatre, Abingdon to Sat. 2nd

The Unicorn Theatre, inside the abbey in Abingdon, dates back to the medieval period.
It boasts an Elizabethan stage - a fitting venue for Shakespeare. This production takes full advantage of the theatre's ideal pre-twentieth century set, and so avoids the pre-occupation of having to perform Shakespeare's plays in a present day context in order to create a modern interpretation. Time, we are told is irrelevant. Costumes were chosen that look nice, mostly from around the 19th century.

The play concentrates on characterisation and communicating the truly timeless nature of that which touches and relates to our lives; and firmly anchors the play in the modern imagination. Members of the cast engage in their roles and portray authentic, feeling human beings. Benedick and Beatrice are exemplary in this. Benedick thought he would remain a bachelor before he knew what it was to be married, but he finds he cannot resist Beatrice who is fair and wise and virtuous. Beatrice is ambiguously passionate and outspoken. Their difficult relationship is equally founded on personality and animated conversation as it is on sex - Benedick does not care what colour her hair is - and the characters portrayed are sympathetic and comfort-ingly familiar to the modern audience.

The production also gives full expression to delicious moments of social satire - the church
