RESTAURANT REVIEW

FOOD The High Table
 71-73 High Street, 01865 248695
 Entering from the High Street, there is room only to step into the porch before the doors open directly onto the tables. It was a quiet night, but we encountered no reception as such: no maître d', no reservations desk, no hat-stands or coat pegs. Instead we were left to wander in and around the minimally-furnished dining area for half a minute or so until our hostess greeted us and asked us where we would like to sit (which I always appreciate). Yet this small delay was no oversight, I decided: this was part of the experience. This was acclimatisation.
 There were no more than half a dozen starters and main courses to choose from, plus an unlisted special - again, I felt, deliberately restricted to focus the mind upon the quality on offer, rather than to divert with abundant choice - though the wine list was extensive. It was immediately drawn towards the wood pigeon starter: a warm salad of grilled salsify, green beans, beetroot and walnuts. I was simply not prepared for how immaculately prepared this dish was. The pigeon was cooked to tender perfection; the vegetables provided the ideal contrasting textures; the presentation was high art. It really was superb. My companion's mushroom risotto also met with favourable opinion, though less emphatically expressed; perhaps there's only so much you can do with a risotto after all.
 On to the main course, then; I almost begrudged our hostess taking my plate, as if she had stolen a souvenir of a fleeting moment. But it was here, as the Trio of Gressingham Duck was placed before me, that I started to get it: I'd been led to choose these dishes with singular conviction, but now, as with the starter, I was being confronted and challenged with a plurality of presentation. A conifer leg, a peppered breast and fried rilette served with creamed potato, sautéed vegetables and amaretto just really demonstrated the extent of thought behind this dish, not to mention the skill and care taken in its execution despite the fact it took next to no time to emerge from the kitchen. The peppered duck breast was no less captivating than that of the wood pigeon - simply without fault. I was not as overwhelmed by the leg or the rilette in this instance, nor the vegetables, but they were nevertheless well done and provided the dish with excellent breadth. I couldn't resist trying my partner's special - pork belly with sautéed potatoes - seriously, you have never, ever had anything like this much joy from a pork dish. It was just a whole different animal, so to speak. The potatoes, too, were astonishing - this is what 'special' is.

It was just as we were ordering dessert that a group of about a dozen came in: it was clear that they had booked, as their table was already set. Despite the forewarning, we did notice that the two staff serving seemed a little stretched to accommodate an increasingly full restaurant. Perhaps in consequence, our desserts took longer than we would have anticipated. When the desserts came, they proved to be every bit worth the wait - most particularly the dark chocolate fondant that arrived on the recommendation of our hostess.
 Having achieved the zenith of our enjoyment, however, the only way was down: the totality of the experience was marred slightly by a bitter, badly-ground espresso, to which a chocolate, biscuit or mint would have proved a welcome
