Arrivals > Latvia: The work of Alnis Stakle
Until 4th March 2006
Different-sized photographs scattered on a grey wall in this installation by Latvian artist, Alnis Stakle, create the narrative of a dream. Viewed from the centre of the lower gallery, the display invites the viewer to hunt for metaphors in images, which could equally well be enjoyed in isolation. Photographs have been economically selected from three of Stakle's series.

EXHIBITION REVIEW
In 'Living Space-Daugavpils' Stakle uses the subdued light of dusk or early morning to bring an endearing honesty to the subject matter (such as the image of one red blanket on the washing line of an impoverished dwelling). Soviet-built Daugavpils is Latvia's second largest city and has been home to the artist for many years, and is the inspiration for the series. Recently, Oxford has been a temporary living space for Stakle, inspiring images such as the spartan Christmas lights of Headington lit against a dusky sky. This new work identifies closely to the self-portraiture used in his 'Place for Dreams' series, which also features in the exhibition. Whilst self-portraiture is an established approach for artists, Stakle uses this
