Painter Sally Bamber and Photographer Robert Taylor invited sixteen people to be the subject of a painted and a photographic portrait - created completely independently - and then asked them to compare and contrast the two media, describing their experiences of the two different processes and feelings about the results. Robert and Sally completed the exercise by creating portraits of each other.

The exhibition, Three-way, features the portraits and extracts from all the written responses.

The Saïd Business School Gallery, Park End St., Oxford. 7th-29th Jan 2008, Monday to Saturday 10am-4pm. Details and directions: www.sallybamber.com/Three-way_exhibition.pdf

PANTO REVIEW

Aladdin
Playhouse till 13th Jan

I am 39 years old and my friend is 40. She suggested that we watch a panto over Christmas for a bit of a giggle. I agreed 'for a laugh' - but secretly I really wanted to see a panto (the last one I watched was in...1976, I think? So I booked the tickets to watch the matinee show on Saturday 15th of December. We felt a bit silly going to our seats in the front stalls with all the Mums, Dads, Grandparents and, of course, children.

But that sense of embarrassment soon lifted with the curtain and the dimming of the lights and the appearance of Miles Western's character, Abanazar. Miles set a high quality of acting and it did not end with him. As the show progressed, and I heard myself and my friend laughing at the slapstick humor and wowing at the magic and raw reality of the magnificent stage lights and colours, the standard of acting from all of the cast was outstanding - they didn't put a foot wrong. I absolutely loved every minute of it. Peter Duncan [producer] used (and I googled them) highly trained professional actors, not some reality TV fly-by-night celebrities to bring in the crowds.This meant that the performance we watched in the packed theatre was as fresh as an opening night performance.

The cast were great actors, dancers and singers. Simon Green's Widow Twankey was superb (Green's voice did not need a mic - he would have been fine if there had been a power cut!). He had the audience eating out of his hand. The guys who played the emperor's hapless police worked so hard, they should be on TV. And the lead roles couldn't have been more perfect. This has sparked my enthusiasm to go out more and watch live performances at the theatre. When the standard is this high, you can't beat it!.
