THEATRE REVIEW

'BONE' by John Donnelly
 Burton Taylor Theatre, Tue May 2nd - Sat May 6th 2006

This play will demand your full attention, but it is well worth the emotional ride. At first the pace and fragmentation made me wonder if I would keep up with all three stories, but the dialogue and delivery kept it flowing and kept the audience spellbound and interested throughout. The play is delivered virtually prop-free (just some mirrors and chairs) by three actors who keep the momentum and rhythm going with no breaks or tricks for a full 90 minutes - that's some achievement. Although some of the dialogue was occasionally not quite perfectly delivered this was a very minor criticism of an excellent first night performance by all three actors.

Helen (played by Jessica Hammett) was the backbone of the entire performance - her pain offered. Phone: 0777 558 2800

Stephen (Peter Clapp) seems pretty unlikeable at first but his story leaves you realising that no one is without their own extenuating circumstances - no one is untouched by hurt. His story explored his feelings of rejection and worthlessness as his ex-girlfriend married someone else, and as well as culminating in one of the most dramatic scenes in the play, he delivered some great one-liners and got the most laughs.

Jamie (Alex Christofi) takes us on a rollercoaster ride of emotions - at first a goodtime jack-the-lad, then a racist soldier, then a heartbroken brother - and trying to deal with the conflict of male desire (wanting to both worship and defile a woman), which ultimately leads to him breaking down - and asking a priest for a hug whilst reassuring him 'I ain't bent'!

At one point I thought we were going to see three tragic endings, and whilst the trilogy of crescendos brings all three characters to a somewhat satisfactory place to leave them, I won't spoil the endings for you. In summary, a spare but complex play taking you on three separate journeys but all with the underlying wounds of loss and rejection. In the words of the Director, Alice Lacey - the three characters with their separate stories never meet. '...yet it is this very lack of coherence (why these characters on this one stage?) that encourages us to search for common ground at a deeper level...and makes 'Bone' such an effective play.'

CINEMA REVIEW
American Dreamz [12A]
 Currently showing at the Odeon and Vue cinemas
 This is a film in which blue America takes a half-hearted and predictable swipe at red America. The film is riddled with race and class bias that it attempts to pass off as parodic. It is neither amusing, nor perceptive. More importantly, it is not the frightening black comedy that it might have been.
 At one point in the film the central characters have the following dialogue:
 "That was a joke."
 "I was aware of that."
 "You didn't laugh."
 "It wasn't funny."
 That about sums it up.
