OXFORD AMNESTY LECTURES 2005: LAND RIGHTS
Until 23rd February @ The Sheldonian Theatre
Thursday 3rd: Misha Glenny, 'The Spider Trap: Property, Organised Crime and the Death of Communism'

Since finishing university, my lecture-going has, to put it kindly, somewhat fallen off, so it wasn't without misgivings that I waited in the Sheldonian for the second of this season's Oxford Amnesty Lectures to begin. Though confident, from the reputation of the series, that the lecture's content was going to be up to scratch, I placed less faith in my own ability to suck the intellectual marrow from the proceedings.

Fortunately, Misha Glenny's 'The Spider Trap: Property, Organised Crime and the Death of Communism' was both accessible and enlightening. For someone more accustomed to undergraduate lectures, which often assume a level of prior knowledge sadly lacking in the audience, it's surprisingly, and pleasantly, different to attend a lecture given for the benefit of the ordinary person, or rather, non-specialist.

Oxford Amnesty Lectures is an independent charity which, while donating its proceeds to Amnesty International, is not itself a part of that organisation, but rather a forum for debate on the subject of human rights. Every February internationally renowned speakers are invited to lecture in Oxford, and, sponsored by the Times Higher Education Supplement, this year's series on 'Land Rights' boasts some big names. Next up is Richard Leakey with 'Whose World is it Anyway?' on Wednesday 9th February.

Misha Glenny is currently a political consultant on South Eastern Europe, whose coverage of the Yugoslavian conflict in the early 90s, as Central Europe correspondent for the BBC World Service, was recognised by a Sony Award in 1993. Glenny is a fine speaker, treating his subject with great affection and insight, pitching its content at just the right level. He spoke fluently, with engaging humour, and only once or twice finished up a point rather too quickly, as though suddenly dissatisfied as to how well his meaning was being conveyed the listeners. It's a tribute both to Glenny's writing and his delivery that he always got his point across. He took as a starting point the rise of organised crime in the Balkan states after the collapse of Soviet Russia and Yugoslavia, a subject familiar to anyone with an ongoing grasp of current affairs. However, he approached the subject from a less populist angle: the inevitability of the problem in view of the economic situation of the region, and the responsibilities of the western countries making hollow protests whilst themselves fuelling demand for organised crime.

This lecture series is a great thing, educational without being intimidating, providing entertainment without frivolity. Go along: beef up your after-dinner conversation; satisfy your intellect; learn something. Proceeds to Amnesty International.

Susie Cogan.

COMPETITION

THE BIG BANG
124 Walton Street, Jericho, Oxford
01865 324441

'Fed up with Valentine's Day, But want a night out? There's a way! A meal will ensue for 3 friends and you - And a poem is all that you'll pay!'

Win a meal for six at The Big Bang!
Submit your anti-valentine's poetry to: bang@dailyinfo.co.uk.
Competition ends Thurs 10th Feb

'Tarry not my good friend, and take up your quill, For your heart you may mend, and your stomach you'll fill! Fear not for your verse - for ours must be worse - And what then is love, but sausage and dogg'rel?'
