staging, nods to the recent film version, and programme stuffed full of quotes and useful facts, this production is clearly intended to be friendly to students and younger viewers. So expect a certain amount of inappropriate laughter and commentary from the teenaged girls behind you. Howev-er, the introduction of new talent from sources as diverse as the Reduced Shakespeare Company, The Globe and the Oxford Shakespeare Company has produced quite an intrigu-ing production of this familiar play. Romeo (Jamie Harding posing gothic ly in a pair of very stylish trousers) is meltingly pretty, and, together with Jon Foster as a fine, upstanding Benvolio and George Mayfield as an overthe-top Mercutio, make an excellent trio of young blades out for a party and a good time. Elaine Symons, as the girl who turns Romeo's world serious, is a curiously Sandra Dee-ish Ju-liet, but finds her voice as the scenes get darker. For the other actors, the strain of the inevitable doubling up sometimes shows, although Matthew Hendrickson does a commendable job of being both Romeo's father and Ju-

The sound is occasionally unsubtle; drums start banging at the outset of every fight scene, and there is an anyoyingly persistent inghtingale. But the compensation comes from the mother to an apothecary in Mantua? What was the Prince's relationship to Mercutio? For the full story, cross
