FILM REVIEW

SKYFALL [12A]

It's almost as if Quantum of Solace never happened. This much-hyped instalment of Bond continues the rolling reboot begun in Casino Royale, delving into Bond's background, setting up the tropes we all hold dear (a new Q, an old car) and pitting Bond against a madman bent on destruction just like the good old days.
 From the first car chase it's clear that Sam Mendes has got the right touch for this film, making something new out of such an old familiar brand. The corners of Daniel Craig's mouth twitch a fair bit. He might be acting, or he might just be letting you know that Bond is like an old dressing gown - a comfortable part that's a pleasure to wear. It probably goes without saying he's also a pleasure to watch!
 Of course it's also loopy - one minute Bond is an old man, who probably ought to be retiring from active service. The next he's just starting out. The plot is rather crazy and the jeopardy more personal, less universal than in some films. But then, have you tried rewatching Moonraker? The latest is no sillier than the classics.
 The best thing about this film, I think, is that it undoes years of tarnish and gets back to the core. It does away with the Brosnan-era sloppy excesses, and the endless gadgets. Here we see a stripped-down, Heineken-drinking Bond, right for the recession. It's more about the people, the internal resources, and the film is all the better for it.
 I hope this film does what it has to keep the studio alive. We're all grown up enough to forgive him the beer, and to know that it's crammed full of product placements to keep the accountants happy, but they've slipped in the advertising without ruining everything. It reminds me a bit of the Olympic Ceremony - homegrown, cheerfully eccentric, with the plot twists a series of remarkably well kept secrets. If you've been in two minds whether this franchise still has what it takes, you don't need to worry - Bond is back on track.
