FILM REVIEW

Borat [15]

Showing at 3 Oxford Cinemas for the foreseeable future. See cinema listings below....

Ha ha ha haaa! This film is so wrong, it's right. I laughed myself stupid along with an almost full cinema of others as Borat blundered his way across the US and A after Pamela Anderson and the American way of life. Not only is this journey undertaken in an ice cream van (and much of it with a bear in the back), but Borat and his producer encounter everything from a gay pride march, a dining and etiquette club and a terrifyingly redneck rodeo, to a veteran feminist meeting and a frat boy road trip.

You've got to marvel at Sacha Baron Cohen's bravery at various points throughout this film. At one point he sings a fake Kazakh national anthem in front of hundreds of Texan rodeo fans to the theme of the Star Spangled Banner - the booing is loud enough to scare the mascot horse into falling onto its female rider - one can only hope she wasn't harmed! Indeed, one wonders throughout how many of the film's participants were in on the act, as Baron Cohen seems to escape miraculously from some horrendous situations without getting his face punched in. (And it probably helps when you're laughing/cringing at the hideous Jewish jokes to remember that one is allowed to joke about one's own.)

Cleverer and subtler than Ali G - but with more than enough toilet humour (literally) to keep the groundlings entertained - this is the funniest thing I have seen in ages.

POETRY COMPETITION WINNER

After spirited debate among the judging panel, a winner has emerged. We would like to acknowledge a very high overall standard, and thank the large number of people who made the effort to submit. Anyway, drumroll please, the winner, because we all liked it, is:

I am a leaf. See how I sway.
Here on my branch I am safe, for today.
A part of the whole, waving about,
I'd like to be noticed but never stand out.

Supple and springy I've summered up here,
The weather my playmate, and misty or clear
The view from my branch is a beautiful thing.
Breezes are tunes and sometimes I sing;

It sounds like a whisper but listen, it's me,
Adding my voice to the song of the tree.
Golden as glory, I bud and I blaze -
Dancing like fire in mercurial ways.

I lived high above you. Did you notice at all?
I am a leaf. See now I fall.

Ian G.

Honourable mentions also, in no particular order, (and there may well be more of these in future sheets) to:

"Mists and mellow fruitfulness
Are all very well," I said,
"But one look out the window
Makes me want to go to bed.

"I think this year I'll make a change,
Pull my duvet overhead,
Miss out the snow drifts, rain and fog,
And hibernate instead.

"If it works for hedgehogs, mice and bears
It might be worth a try.
Just tuck me underneath the stairs
In a cardboard box that's dry.

"I suppose I'll miss a few things,
Like Halloween and Bonfire Night,
Christmas Pud and New Years Eve
Roast turkey and fairy lights,

"The smell of wood smoked jumpers
From cosy, warming fires,
Re-runs of timeless sitcoms
Of which Grandpa never tires,

"Persistent carol singers
Who Dad pays to go away,
Trays of homemade mincemeat pies,
The whole family come to stay.

"Perhaps it won't be quite so bad
We may not see much sun
But with all these things to compensate,
It might just be quite fun."

Isabel

By eck its cold
The leaves are falling
A Caribbean cruise is calling

Swap the boots
For flips and flops
Jet off before the temperature drops.

Swimming in the clear blue sea
That's the only place for me.

But sadly money won't allow
So I'll just have to dream for now.

Instead I'll opt for nice roast dinners
Winter stews are always winners.

Autumn comes but once a year
During which, I'm stuck right here.

Compost your bikinis, stop fake tanning your tummies
but what is the hot colour? Nobody knows.
Orange is mooted - please something more muted!
Shops know very well, puke green never sells.
Follow the shrivel birch bark, it shrivels to dark.
As leaves shower down the hot look in town
in the park, black is back!
