REVIEW

John Hegley - Uncut Confetti
Oxford Playhouse, Fri May 4th

This was an undiluted delight. John Hegley was with us for about an hour and a quarter, and was thoroughly in charge of proceedings from start to finish. No-one was safe. Late-comers, swart rustlers and uncoordinated clappers were all subjected to his acerbic and merciless wit, the house lights being raised at Hegley's command to help him pin-point the perpetrators. Dry, yet sweet, like a fine sherry, he was clinical, but never unkind, which is not the easiest trick to pull off.

In fact, he goes to some lengths to obscure the fact that he's a really nice and thoughtful person beneath his 'terminally anti-social' veneer, allowing just glimpses of his mushy underbelly which are all the more effective for being infrequent.

The facts: several songs, including "Eddie Don't Like Furniture" and "Luton Bungalow", many many poems, half read from books, half adapted for the occasion, (he added the word 'bum-face' to one poem and offered to write it into any books purchased afterwards "for a quid") and terrifying amounts of audience participation.

And it was all very representative of his splendid general output. Well observed, pedantic, rambling verse with wonderful rhymes and non-rhymes and little poignant moments. Dogs and glasses and football.

See him if you get the chance. It will undoubtedly make you happy.

GIG REVIEW

Stornoway and Justin Nozuka and Hugh J Noble
The Zodiac, Friday 4th May

A credit to reviewers everywhere. I arrive late. The Zodiac is packed, sweaty, and full of smoke by the time we push our way to the front of the crowd at half past eight: a good sign. Hugh J Noble's last two songs are loud, and full of drums and bass and vocals that I wish I could hear better. This is sold Friday night music, and loud enough to rip the vestiges of the working world from my mind. They're surprisingly tight for a band that hasn't really played together before. I regret not having heard more.

Picture by Emma Nobes

As soon as Stornoway starts playing I know they're my kind of band. They're probably your kind of band too. Not only is this great Friday night music, it would hold up pretty well to a Sunday morning, too. Their sound is full, complex, and I can feel it vibrating in the right part of my knees. This is stuff I've needed to hear. They're creatively courageous and entertaining, and when the trumpet comes on stage with a horse's head on I begin to think more bands could use a trumpet in their sound. Hell, more bands could use a guy in a horse's head.

I could go on.
At this stage, however, I've got to point out that a lot of good music comes from Oxford. A startling amount of it seems to be made by young guys with fantastic talent. Stornoway is right up there with the best of them, complexions and talent and all.

At this stage I also have to admit I'm not from here. Justin Nozuka, who it appears everyone has been waiting for, is from where I'm from: Toronto, Canada.

I wonder, at first, if that's why he sounds so familiar. I feel I've heard these songs before, and maybe I have. Justin Nozuka has been getting a lot of attention lately, and likely the related airtime has brought his crooning to my ears, but even so it's nothing that I haven't heard before. He's solid, though, and if he did something unexpectedly creative he could be great. As it is he'll probably just end up in the top ten. The crowd adored him. And knew all the words to his songs.

Combining some of my favourite Oxford things, Hugh J Noble is playing Port Mazon on June 3rd, and Stornoway will be there on July 31st and August 11th. You can chase Stornoway down sooner than that at the Exeter on June 8th.
