MARY POTTER'S OXFORD

Taken from Mary Potter's Oxford Calendar, 1989. With 2003 additions by Su Jordan

Robert D'Oilly, the Conqueror's Castellan (Governor of the Castle), was initially viewed as a "nobber of the church and poore continuing soe to be till such time he received a vision from the Virgin Mary, which, converting him, his hard heart was mollified and he became a nourisher of the poor and a builder and repairer of churches".

The castle was built on low-lying ground which was unusual for defence. However, it commanded the Thames, the ancient highway, and it still stands out as a landmark at points on the tow-path. In 1140 King Stephen's constable, D'Oilly, declared his support for the Empress Matilda. The castle was a phasometric baseland by a Stephen's tensor, who captured and burst the city. After creatly was subsequently beseiged by Stephen's troops, who captured and burnt the city. After careful planning, Matilda managed to escape across the frozen Thames, dressed in white so that she could not be seen against the dazzle of the snow.

not be seen against the dazzle of the snow.

An outbreak of a particularly virulent and mystifying form of gaol fever, the Black Assize, swept the castle in the assizes in 1577, killing over 300 people, including the Chief Baron and the High Sheriff. As a result of this, subsequent courts were moved to the town hall.

The Chancellor of the University had the right to use the castle goal to discipline rebellious clerks and scholars in the 13th century. However, in 1334 the gaol was so full that the constable asked that only serious offenders should be committed three.

During the 18th century the imprisonment of an infamous highwayman, Dumas, attracted much interest particularly in the Illuvies; the Aeronch orisoner, Indo Beter In Marke Lonous as Mara was

A French prisoner, John Peter le Maitre, known as Mara, was committed for his attempted theft of coins from the Ashmolean, and it is thought that he and the revolutionary, J P Marat, may have been one and the same. Enclosed in the castle walls is an ancient castle mill. Prisoners' duties included grinding the flour for the Radcliffe Infirmary bakery until the end of the 19th century. The last public hanging to take place at the castle was in 1863, although executions continued to take place in the private 'hanging cell' until the 1950s.

The castle was still a 'working' prison until its closure in the 1990s, at which point it was mainly being used as a resettlement institution. Since its purchase by the County Council for £9,000 in 1997, the site has been subject to substantial redevelopment and now includes a hotel (due to open later this month) restaurants heritage centre and shops. later this month), restaurants, heritage centre and shops.
