ON THIS DAY...
...in 1994: NELSON MANDELA became the first black President of South Africa. Born Rolihlahla Dalibhunga in 1918, Mr Mandela was given his English name by a teacher at his school. Now 83, Nobel Peace Prize winner Mr Mandela would no doubt be pleased to know the following piece of Oxford trivia. As a tribute to its reputation as one of Oxford's most right-on Colleges, Wadham continued to play the protest song Free Nelson Mandela as the closing track at its bops (this being accompanied by the traditional carrying of female students upon the shoulders of dancing males) after Mr Mandela's release from prison in 1990. The tradition continues today.

NINETEENTH CENTURY OXFORD

For Oxford, the nineteenth century was a time of supreme confidence, vigorous debate, and a sense of orderly progress. It was certainly a masculine stronghold, which fostered great men, and loyal citizens:

Oxford, thy courts and cloisters are a bower
Whence thought - earth-shaking and earth-shaping - drew
Promise and power;
Here coming rulers, who will one day wield
Old Empire's rod, our England's finest flower,
Practise their pretence-hands in mimic strife,
And playing field,
Learning the Master's touch and Maker's life;
While Isis ripples with its storied stream,
And every rill a hope and haloed dream."
Frederick William Ward,
from "Oxford the Dreamer"

One of the great men was Gladstone, who having obtained a double first in Classics and Mathematics in 1831, was a lifelong devotee: "To call a man an Oxford man is to pay him the highest compliment that can be paid to a human being."

The emphasis was not entirely chauvinistic, however. Other notable figures included Hilaire Belloc, Charles Dodgson (Lewis Carroll), Francis Kilvert the diarist, and Oscar Wilde, as well as the great leaders of the 'Oxford Movement' through which the Anglo-Catholic branch of the Church of England was established.
During the nineteenth century, river sports, always popular, inspired almost fanatical enthusiasm. "It is characteristic of the authorities of Oxford", wrote George Bernard Shaw in 1898, "that they should consider a month too little for the preparation of a boat-race, and
