OXFORD HISTORY

THE ASHMOLEAN MUSEUM
... a few of its treasures ...

The Alfred Jewel, 9th century
Etruscan Bronze Lion 500 B.C.
Bronze Cat from Egypt 6th century B.C.
Bronze gilt Candelabrum by Antonia Gai (1686-1769)
Attic black-figure pelike from Rhodes 5th century B.C.
"Shoemaker at work"
The dark lantern used by Guy Fawkes

Built 1841-5 by C.R. Cockrell R.A.
Superb collection of pictures, silver, oriental arts and antiquities.
(Main museum - oldest in the country - founded 1683)

1. The collection presented to Oxford in 1683 by Elias Ashmole was originally housed in Broad Street, in what is now the Museum of the History of Science - and was the first museum in England.
2. Ashmole's collection had in turn been built up around curiosities brought to Oxford in the sixteenth century by John Tradescant and his son. These included a Turkish tooth brush, the Dodo (whose remains are now in the University Museum), various eggs from Turkey (one thought to be a dragon's egg).
3. Until recently, a cup made from a Unicorn's horn was on display. It can still be seen, but the horn is now ascribed to a rhinoceros.
4. Ashmole added some more local items, such as a corn, two inches long, taken off the toe of a Sarney, a Wheelwright of St. Aldate's Parish in Oxford, 1655. Many of the less salubrious exhibits quietly disappeared during the transition to the present Ashmolean building in 1848, in whose basement the first Oxford Dictionary was produced.
