REVIEW

The Concept Show
 at the Regal, Tuesday 1st March 2011

Oxford Fashion Week 2011 ran from 28th February - 6th March. The Photography Exhibition in the O3 Gallery at the Oxford Castle, featuring pictures from shows and backstage at Oxford Fashion Week 2010 and 2009, will run until 20th March, and the Style Show (and 'Clothes Extravaganza') will take place on the 19th March at the University Exam Schools.

Marking the first of the week's five runway events, the spectacular Concept Show hailed the start of Oxford Fashion Week 2011. The Regal's grand art-deco interior provided a fitting setting for a show that prides itself on wowing the audience with bold fashion creations. Startech Productions framed the runway with a trio of impressive, if somewhat pixelated, LED curtains, which bore the names of the designers as their explosive creations were modelled.

Before the first model took to the runway, an unseen, off-stage band introduced the show with a long instrumental track. In keeping with the night's 'atomic blast' concept, the futuristic and slightly ominous music was smattered with distorted and robotic samples (reminiscent of the queue for Space Mountain). When the start of the show was heralded by a loud countdown to a rocket-launch, the music evolved into a strong and funky War of The Worlds-esque dubstep soundtrack that continued throughout the night.

The show got off to a bold start, with Ki Ching Cheung & Ka Wai Lo's collection channelling the atomic theme with bare bodies caged in futuristic, geometric mesh structures. The barefoot models held expressionless Oedipus-like masks to their faces, adding to the inhuman feel of the collection. Woolen monk-like robes also featured, rendered futuristic by exaggerated hoods, sleeves, pockets and rigid collars, and urbanised by their juxtaposition with angular eyewear. The models wore neutral makeup on their cheeks and lips, but their eyelids were boldly streaked with electric blue, contrasting powerfully with the natural, earthy shades of the fabric.

To the beat of the unrelenting dubstep soundtrack, the collections came thick and fast. Highlights included Mi Kyoung Kim's stunning gowns: feminine pastel shades and inflated sleeves wonderfully offset by angular protrusions around the waist and hips.

Another standout collection was delivered by Capouche, whose snoods and centurion-like furry hats brought the show's only male models onto the runway. Yu-Hsuan-Liu is also to be congratulated for a striking collection that
