REVIEW : CONCERT

Christ Church Festival Orchestra. Conductor: James Ross
Sheldonian Theatre
Brahms: Double Concerto for Violin and 'Cello. Jonathan Clarke: Lament

In addition to providing a platform for five highly-accomplished soloists, Christ Church Festival Orchestra's concert of 13 June featured the first performance of a new work, Jonathan Clarke's Lament, a cantata for the earth. Like the Brahms double concerto for violin and 'cello that opened the concert, the piece explores a huge range of emotions and sonorities, and the contrasts provided by this programme of late-romantic and contemporary orchestral works ensured that the concert was both uplifting and thought-provoking.

James Ross's expert conducting allowed soloists Daniel Bhattacharya (violin) and Andrew Taylor ('cello) to rise above the orchestral texture of the Brahms concerto, and although it was occasionally difficult to make out the 'cello line, this was perhaps due to the enthusiasm of the orchestral players. The soloists blended well, both in terms of timbre and style, carrying off the contrasting styles within the concerto movements with finesse. More contrast between the winsome second movement and the dance-like third would have provided further polish, but the grandeur of Brahms's work was nonetheless confidently conveyed.

Using the additional forces of a chorus and three soloists with a traditional symphony orchestra, Jonathan
