THEATRE REVIEW

Henri Oguike Dance Company
Oxford Playhouse, Sat 11th October

Combining a range of music and movement to create diverse moods, the Henri Oguike Dance Company came to the Playhouse to present four contrasting pieces, mixing vibrant movement with storytelling, operatic effect with Latin pulse and social commentary with sheer joyful expressiveness.

The music was the key element, setting the mood for dancers and audience alike. Two lighter, energetic pieces sandwiched the longer, more complex fable of Dido and Aeneas, the hero who Dido voluntarily relinquishes in order that he can fulfil his destiny as founder of Rome. A short, sharp solo by the company's eponymous artistic director and choreographer completed the programme.
Dido & Aeneas is an ambitious project which seeks to relate a story as well as expressing the characters' emotions. Set to a resounding operatic recorded backing which comes dangerously close to dominating the movement work, the dancing is expressive and superbly timed, yet fails to provide much needed contrast between scenes. There are intense moments, such as the pathos conveyed by bodies writhing on the floor to the accompaniment of minor chords as Dido expires, but the piece at times seems laborious and one-paced, prone to lose momentum and at times hard to follow.

Verbal clues and body language

KNOWLEDGE OF BODY language and verbal clues is an important addition to your armoury of bargaining tactics.
Carefully study the other party's language and body movements and act upon them accordingly (although bear in mind that movements could be natural and unrelated - the key is to look for sudden changes).
Verbal clues
"I'll see what I can do/I'll try my best"
● Probably will not happen
"I wish I could!"
● A sign that the person can do whatever it is, but needs to be convinced.
"It doesn't mean to be personal"
● Usually precedes personal statement.
"To tell the truth/honestly/frankly!"
● Sometimes used to legitimate a statement that may be untrue or an exaggeration.
"Before I forget/by the way/ incidentally!"
● An apparently casual statement, usually preceding something the other party thinks is very important.
Body language
Signs of lying/exaggeration:
● stroking the nose
● sudden quick blinking
Signs of disinterest/boredom:
● chin resting in the palm of the hand
● glasses taken off and placed on a table
Signs of disbelieving approval:
● staring over the top of the glasses
Signs of interest:
● chin stroking
● head tilted towards you
● knuckles placed below the chin
● tugging on the ear
Signs of concentration/heeding more time:
● touching the bridge of the nose
● cleaning glasses
Signs of nervousness/impatience:
● damp palms
● drumming fingers
● scratching the back of the head
Signs of pressing:
● confining fingertips together
● strong handshake
Signs of annoyance:
● person places hand on the back of their head
