MUSIC IN OXFORD

Oxford Music has always been considered rather stuffy and academic compared with the more experimenta approach at Cambridge.

Handel spent a week in Oxford in 1733, and his visit is now commemorated by an annual festival. The le han enthusiastic description of Handel's presence belongs to the antiquarian Thomas Hearne, who wa enowned for his jaundiced views of his contemporaries. It is possible that Handel refused the proffered octorate because he did not want to be associated with the examination regulations involved

In July 1791 however, Havdn visited Oxford to receive an honorary Doctorate of Music for which he ed the following exerc

Thy voice, O Har-mo - ny, is di -	vine.
¢ PEPPPE	e-p-N
voice, O Har - mo - ay, is di vine.	Δų⊥
	00 H

This canon can be turned upside down and sung backwards. If you and two brave friends care to try i out, it may help to know that the clefs are G clefs - so the first note is D.)

Three grand concerts, in one of which Haydn directed his 'Oxford' Symphony from the organ, formed part of the celebrations on this occasion. At the third concert he appeared in his doctor's go delight of the audience.

The choir schools, which all now have quite independent international reputations, enjoy a friendly rivalry In 1986 they combined for the first time for a concert in memory of Professor Denis Arnold. Magdaler choir has the annual task of singing traditional May Day carols from the top of the college tower at 6an ery May 1st. Once a peaceful occasion, this has become the trigger for festivities all over the city fro

The timeless and unmistakably British humour of Michael Flanders was combined with Donald Swann melodic gift in the 'At the Drop of a Hat' shows which became popular in the fifties and sixties. Flanders' introductory rambles were as important to these as the songs themselves, among which are 'The Gas Man Cometh', 'The Hippopotamus Song' and 'Have some Madeira M'Dear'.

Godspell - O'Reilly Theatre Tuesday 13th - Saturday 17th November 2004

A musical based on the bible. Not everyone's cup of tea you might imagine. But the high-quality production provided by "MofO productions" certainly is, "Godspell" is a sometime-comedic, some-time gui-twenching amalgam of story and song, based on the gospel of SI Matthew. The writing of the show is very open to interpretation by the compny, something that the MofO company have taken full advantage of. Take for example, the story of the Good Samaritan, retold here as a BBC news broadcast, with the injured man being whipped off in a shopping trolley. Which, may I add, is seamlessly drawn from the psychedelically delightful set.

Seamessly brawn nom the psycheducian denginus set. This show looks GREAT, from the opening scenes when the hippy disciples are baptised in glitter, to the final, awful scenes of grief when Jesus is first tortured and then crucified. In part this is testament to the skills of designer Adam Perchard, director Laura Corcoran, and choreographer Rachel Goodyer - the physical imagery in this production is outstanding. But credit must also go to the excellent cast, who maintain their exuberant energy from start to finish, despite what was a similarly unresponsive audience And did I mention that this show SOUNDS great? The ensemble work is impeccable, with musical director Matthew Jones drawing out excellent performances from each and every performer. Ensemble is the operative word here, but Barry Giney as Jesus cannot be passed over for special mention. This gentle, amiable northerner strikes exactly the right balance between command and friendship with the disciples, making his eventual betrayal all the more gutting.

I must admit I came to this production with Godspell with a bit of a bias. I hate Godspell. Having worked on it in nearly every capacity available, far more times that I would care to remember, I really though that there was no chance that this production could bring something fresh to it for me. I was very, very, wrong.
