THEATRE REVIEW

Arcadia, by Tom Stoppard
Old Fire Station until Saturday 20th

Arcadia is a brilliant play written by Tom Stoppard. So brilliant in fact that it is the subject of study by a generation of school pupils. As a result our performance was packed with school parties, who ooh-ed and aah-ed, giggled and whispered in anticipation and in reaction to seeing the written text come alive. The story is a complex tale of time, truth, science, literature, love, fractals and the philosophy of science. In a house inhabited by ghosts we see the past and the present day brought together. To explain the plot would take too long - all you need to know is that it involves Byron and a possible deadly duel, brought to life by the people of 1809 and through the documents they left behind. The performance had a shaky start and sticky scenery throughout: there was many a giggle as the actors fought their way out past a reluctant door. The play started in 1809, with accents and affections that detracted somewhat from the plot. Lady Groom spoke in an inexplicable manner, and the interpretation of Valentine as gay, which was certainly not intended by the playwright, robbed Val's relationship towards Hanna of its underlying desire; he became a parody of high camp that induced mass sniggering in our row. These elements unfortunately combined to give the play initially the style of a school production
