Duke Humphrey's Library, above the Divinity School, was completed in 1488, to house the collection given by him to the University 40 years earlier.

Only a century later the collection had already dispersed and the buildings fallen into disrepair. Sir Tho mas Bodley not only restored the library, which reopened in 1602, but also saw the need for expansion, requiring "better built scholes ... than those ruinous little rooms" then used for the purpose. The Schools Quadrangle was accordingly begun in 1613.

By this time, again thanks to Sir Thomas, an agreement had been reached with the Company of Stationers for the library to receive a copy of each book published in Britain - it became what was later called a Copyright Library. More recently, the implications of this have not gone unnoticed, and it used to be considered an act of intellectual daring to require the librarians to produce a copy of, for example, Enid Blyton's 'Noddy' and peruse it in the reading room.

The library now stretches south to the Radcliffe Camera, and north under Broad Street to the New Bodleian and contains almost 5 million books, requiring a mile and a half of new shelving a year. The Curators are understandably nervous about the possibility of fire. All readers have to take a solemn oath not only to obey the regulations of the library but also 'not to bring into the Library or kindle therein any fire or flame.' Before the days of electric lighting, this of course meant that no light could be kindled, and limited the working day considerably - especially in winter. And still books may only be consulted in the library. Charles I had his request to borrow refused. So did Cromwell.

The facade is a lavish display of Jacobean architecture, incorporating five classical orders: starting from the ground, Tuscan, Roman Doric, Ionic, Corinthian and Composite.

RESTAURANT REVIEWS

Thorntons Café, Westgate Centre

Like their Viennese truffles, this café is smooth and creamy; at least throughout the week, when you can linger over a capo (£1.20) listening to fat jazzy tunes. It's a bit too hectic for that kind of caper at the weekend, when you get cajoled to have your latte (£1.50) as a take out or fight for a seat. Weekday customers are of the mature variety with a taste for elasticised slacks. They frequent Thornton's possibly because they know a good plum danish (95p - also apricot & fruit varieties) when they see one. If you are a chocoholic, findyou an espresso packed with va va voom and each hot drink comes with mocha (£1.50), the cups are like soup continental Latte (£1.95). If you find £1.95.

Allders Restaurant, Westgate Centre

When John Lewis became Allders the first casualty was the Grosvenor Room; a brown bedecked eatery (where smoking whilst eating was a possibility!). Months later, amidst the duvet department, the Restaurant at Allders landed. A visit may be the closest you ever get to the inside of an alien spaceship. This is still a department store dining room, but it goes a long way to look designer. Phillipe Starck's style of mood changing lighting is akin to the way sections of the walls are painted primary colour with blue lights dotted around. Terrence Conran's taste in chrome utility objects is similar to the enlarged lifestyle photographs hung on white walls. The self service food counters have the layout of a motorway service station although prices are almost cut in half and point of sale junk encouraging you to buy a souvenir T-shirt of your visit are absent. The full English breakfasts I have eaten here for the past five years have been consistently the best I have tasted in ing yourself in the Westgate area Oxford (5 items £1.75, 8 items needing sustenance, this place pulls £2.75). Staff are patient while you you in like a magnet. One pound gets dither over your choices and work hard to keep queues moving. Looking for a bargain? Fish and chips afa chocolate. Push the boat out with ter 3pm costs £1.75. Go healthy with a help yourself salad, (small bowl bowls. Their milk-frothing machine £2.65, large bowl £3.35). High tea? could do it for Texas - find out with a Egg mayo sandwich (£2.30) croissant or scone (90p), tea (90p) leaving difficult, sandwiches start at However, no matter how cool the décor, the tea pots still leak.
