PLACES TO VISIT

"The Parks, opposite Keble, are what is, in any other town, called a park." (Betjeman). The policy of the curators has been to provide "as many interesting trees as possible without detracting from the natural beauty of the indigenous by an excess of the exotic."

Port Meadow, on the other hand, is a natural grazing ground whose use has remained unchanged for 900 years or so. Disputes over ownership raged between Oxford and Wolvercote from the 13th to the 20th century. By 1970, grazing rights established by 130 Wolvercote householders (entitled by law to graze anything from a few geese to 60 head of cattle each) outweighed those established by Oxford Freeemen. Nevertheless, once a year, the Sheriff of Oxford would ride out with the Freeemen to impound the animals. They were then surrendered to their owners on payment of a £3 fine. The date changed from year to year, and was kept a strict secret. The Sheriff usually conducted operations from horseback except for one in the early 60s, who as a member of the RAF, preferred to do so from a helicopter.

It is alarming to contemplate the threat that overshadowed Christ Church Meadow for much of the latter part of the 20th century. In 1933 it was suggested that a four lane highway be built across it to relieve Oxford traffic, and proposals for a sunken road were still being put forward as recently as 1968. The combined efforts of the citizens and past and present members of Christ Church (including seven members of the cabinet) eventually squashed any suggestion of such a scheme.

There are three main paths across Christ Church Meadow: Broad Walk has long been a popular route, and rests on material from the foundations of Christ Church. In the Civil War it was dug up to form defensive trenches against Cromwell's troops.

Poplar Walk was formed by Dean Liddell to cope with the increasing number of people wanting to reach the river for boating trips. These included, of course, Charles Dodgson and Alice. Dead Man's Walk is so named because it was the route taken by funeral processions from the Synagogue to the Jewish burial ground. This was on the site of the Botanical Gardens.

Magdalen Deer Park is first mentioned in 1706, and even today the college has a reputation for its venison. Nearby is the 'Magdalen plane' which is 185 years old, and the entrance to the 'Water Walks' or 'Addison's Walks' - a delightful circuit of about a mile, which takes you along the river banks.
