Oxford Centre for Islamic Studies
GRAPHIC DESIGNER
 The Oxford Centre for Islamic Studies is a Recognised Independent Centre of the University of Oxford and is dedicated to the multi-disciplinary study of the Muslim world.
 Applications are invited for a Graphic Designer to work on academic research and publishing programmes.
 The Centre is looking for a highly-motivated, creative individual with an ability to work under pressure and excellent organisational and communication skills. He or she should have proven experience of working in a design/publishing environment, with an emphasis on production and design and the ability to give a visual expression to academic concepts. The successful candidate should have a flexible approach to design and the relevant technical qualifications and skills, involving calligraphy, graphics and desktop publishing.
 Much of the work will focus on the Centre's Atlas of the Social and Intellectual History of Muslims in South Asia. The Atlas is a programme of research into the history and geographical spread of social and intellectual movements in the Islamic world.
 The post is offered for an 18 month period (in the first instance) with a starting date to be mutually agreed but the position is available immediately. This role may include occasional work outside normal working hours. A competitive salary will be determined by qualifications and experience, within the range £23,121 - £27,578.
 Applications should be in the form of a covering letter and a CV e-mailed to Gordon.Brown@oxcis.ac.uk, or posted to The Assistant Registrar, The Oxford Centre for Islamic Studies, George Street, Oxford, OX1 2AR. Applicants should also arrange for two referees to write directly to the Assistant Registrar before the closing date.
 Closing date for applications: Monday 13th August 2012. For further details please see www.oxcis.ac.uk/vacancies
