OXFORD HISTORY

1. There are about 115 pubs in Oxford, many dating from coaching days, when this was an important centre. In spite of Brewery take-overs and modernisations, Oxford's pubs for the most part retain their individual characters.

2. The Golden Cross is the site of the oldest Oxford Inn. Its landlord was prosecuted for selling wine on the black market in 1285, and in 1388 it was bought by William of Wykeham (the founder of New College). It remained New College property until 1825.

3. The King's Arms is sometimes known as 'Wadham College annexe', and was the last pub in Oxford to relinquish its men only room (c.1973).

4. The Eagle and Child, nicknamed the 'The Bird and Baby', was the regular meeting place of C.S. Lewis and 'The Inklings', who included J.R.R. Tolkien among their number.

5. The Mitre has been a feature of University life for centuries, and often appears in Oxford fiction. Its central position has made it the scene for many a drama, and until 1921, it was still possible to visit the priest's hole, where Roman Catholic priests could hide from their persecutors. There is a story that in 1683, three drunken fellows of All Souls, coming late at night to demand food, so terrified the landlady that she died of fright.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

Economists for consulting

Bringing analytical rigour to business

Oxford Economic Research Associates Ltd (OXERA), Europe's leading firm of economic consultants, is highly regarded for the quality of its work. We are looking for new entrants to join our team of consultants and analysts.

Undergraduates and postgraduates studying economics are invited to a presentation in our offices in the centre of Oxford. If you are highly motivated, want to apply the economics you have learnt, and like the thought of having responsibility and client contact at an early stage in your career, then we look forward to meeting you.

Wednesday 21 November at 6.00 p.m.
at Blue Bear Court, Alfred Street, Oxford
(opposite The Bear)

Enquiries to Alison Gomm,
tel: 253000, fax: 251172
Website: www.oxera.co.uk

There can be no better place than OXERA to learn the skills of an applied economist
