THEATRE TO SAT 27 NOV
Peer Gynt
 Friday 19th and Saturday 20th at the O'Reilly Theatre, Keble College
 Henrik Ibsen's Peer Gynt was reportedly met with hostility by several famous names, including Hans Christian Andersen, when it was first performed in 1867. The playwright's deliberate disregard for the conventions of nineteenth century drama - particularly in constantly shifting the characters through time and space, between dreams and reality - is reinforced in the play itself, when the eponymous Peer refers to Anitra as 'not quite in accord with the norms of beauty'. He goes on to say 'But what is beauty? A mere convention' - one which both Peer and Ibsen are determined to flout. Student company Spiral Staircase Productions captures the provocative nature of the play and reinvents it for a modern audience, making it just as exhilarating - and shocking - almost 150 years after publication.
 Tim Kiely makes an excellent Peer, effectively portraying the protagonist in several different stages of life and situations. Kiely is equally impressive in moving scenes, such as that in which Peer's elderly mother, Aase, dies in his arms, and the more energetic scenes featuring the large chorus, who are transformed from trolls to monkeys to patients in a madhouse. Kiely and Philip are supported by the aforementioned chorus, who contribute great energy and passion, though the shouting and chaos created does become a little overwhelming at times.
 The greatest asset of this production is its twenty-something strong orchestra that performs the original score by Edvard Grieg. The orchestra is set up above the stage and, together with the lighting, transforms the very simple set. The most compelling scenes are those brought to life by music: Peer's attempts to escape the trolls, accompanied by Grieg's In the Hall of the Mountain King, and Aase's passing away, beautifully rendered with the help of the piece Aase's Death.
