Review: Therapy

Do you, like us, spend your working days hunched uncomfortably over a computer screen while demonic overseers lash your bent back with barbed whips? Do you limp home at nightfall, aching and contorted, requiring a hot bath and three quick whiskies to feel halfway human again? Then rejoice fellow office workers, for we at Daily Information, ever eager to be of service, have found the solution. Her name is Yvette, and she has come to bring blessed relief to your tortured frame.

It's one of those ideas which is so simple and obvious that I for one am amazed not to have met it before. A visiting therapist brings her own special chair and sets it up in your office. The wage slaves form an orderly queue, worked out on sound democratic principles, and a succession of sore backs, stiff necks and cases of "typist's wrist" are melted away, leaving an office full of serene, almost Buddha-like figures, positively gleaming with increased productivity.

You may think that this lyrical picture is somewhat exaggerated, but that only goes to show how much you need to experience it for yourself. It's amazing how much tension and discomfort you can accept as natural until it's all gone. If you work in any other position than on your back in a hammock, wave this review at your boss and demand that he or she arrange regular visits in the interest of morale. citing the dramatic improvements in the health and attitude of our team as your evidence.

Humour aside, though, employers' attitudes have changed over the past few years and most now realise that such treatments pay for themselves, through improved working atmospheres and reductions in illness and absenteeism, and therefore many often pay in full or subsidise the service. Other advantages are simple and obvious. Little space is required, clothes do not need to be removed and no oils or creams are used. The massage is based on Japanese acupressure, working on the back, arms, hands and neck area to reduce stress and fatigue, and boost energy and alertness. The

CORNACOPIA BAR & RESTAURANT

92 Cowley Road, Oxford Tel: 794114 www.cornacopia.co.uk

This restaurant has a fresh, modern feel, reflected in the abstract art on the walls and the innovative, 'fusion' approach to the cooking. Cornacopia, as its name suggests, offers a menu that draws plentiful inspiration from several different continents.

The friendly and extremely enthusiastic, eager to talk about the sourcing of the fresh produce and the philosophy behind their restaurant, but, ultimately, believe that the food will 'do the talking'. And, they're right. There is an emphasis on cooking from the Indian sub-continent classic curry dishes abound. Tired of Cówley Road curries, we

Having ascertained the quality of Indian food, we turned our attention to the

'fusion' fare: in the main, a playful collaboration between southeast Asian and French cuisines - very modern, clean, exciting flavours. My tartar du salmon was a blush pink mound of raw salmon infused with a lime dressing, interesting and deliand went for the sirloin steak with pink pepper corn sauce. Again, this had a more vibrant fla vour than one might have expected from a classical French recipe which gave the usual brandy-cream concoction a pleasant kick. My friend has salmon with five spices. The fish was perfectly cooked, again with an intriguingly zingy cream sauce A bottle of house white at £12.50 accompanied dinner. This together with a Budweiser and a soft drink came to £42.50. You can eat rather more cheaply- we chose from some of the more expensive items, and it seemed entirely possible to have two courses and drinks for under a tenner- a fantastic bargain, in view of the quality of the food. My only complaint would be that the pudding menu consisted of nothing but ice cream-surely scope

Nevertheless, this relatively small quibble aside Cornacopia is an extremely welcome addition to the Cowley Road- relaxed, unpretentious, innovative and excellent value.

DAILY INFORMATION New person wanted to teach themselves (with help) how to produce the sheet and run the website. But most of their time would be spent in making people aware how much more useful Daily Information could be to them than they previously realised would be appreciated.

Have you got (or are you about to get) at least a 2.1 from Oxford?

Are you generally helpful? Would you be able to accept being moved from job to job whercould learn here). Have you ever put up a sound, good looking shelf? Do people come to you when they want something 'fixed'? a year? Are there any significant errors in ths advert? If so, what?
