The John Berger Lecture

Things subverting ideas: Africa in the British Museum
Neil MacGregor

Friday 27 April 6.30pm

Nelson Mandela Lecture Theatre
Saïd Business School
Park End Street
Oxford OX1 1HP

Admission free
No booking required but limited seating

For over 250 years the British Museum has presented to the public objects from sub-Saharan Africa as elements in different narratives of the Continent's history. This lecture will look at the intellectual impact of new objects arriving in London at various points in the 20th century and how they changed our readings of African cultures and their relation to the rest of the world.

Neil MacGregor has been Director of the British Museum since August 2002. He was Director of the National Gallery, London from 1987-2002.

CINEMA REVIEW

300 [15]

Phoenix, Vue & Odeon George St, all week.

This is a grotesque film. In itself that does not make it a bad film. After all Sin City was an incredible cinematic experience, if not a pleasurable one. 300 however is not worthy to be compared with its predecessor.

The battle scenes are laughable: had the Spartans fought like that they'd be a funny footnote on the arse of Athenian history. It was more like Fight Club than the product of a noble warrior nation and Itchy and Scratchy have demonstrated a greater sense of honour than shown here.

300 has been described as an ode to violence, fine, but it is also an ode to eugenics. Our good guys are the product of ruthless eugenics, violently disposing of anyone weak. In contrast the bad guys (the Persians and Oracles) are described as inbreeds and shown as deformed monsters. Any disability or deformity is linked with perversion, cruelty and sub-human behaviour. Particularly disgusting is the Persian harem, which in contrast to the physically perfect and strong minded Spartan women is filled with fawning and disabled whores.

The Persians are unrecognisable as any nation described in human history and in many respects are more like some cruel alien race. Can we be surprised that the descendents of the Persian Empire are a little peeved at the depiction of their ancestors? On another racist note the decision to change many of the Persians to sub-Saharan Africans whilst the Spartans become northern Europeans was as distasteful as it is unnecessary.

To be fair the visuals and very skilful use of voice-over create a wonderful aura of a grand and epic story. But when the actual plot and implications of the film unfold no amount of slow motion dripping blood can hide its puerile and fascist substance.

CINEMA REVIEW

Blades of Glory

[12A], Odeon George Street & Vue Cinemas

Utterly silly, OTT to the utmost and yet fun. This movie has no pretensions to anything but entertainment and I think it does a reasonable job of it.

For all those who like me have watched figure ice skating wondering what it was all about and found the whole sport preposterous and quite ridiculous, this will answer a few questions. More sequinned than Shirley Bassey's wardrobe, this movie is camp and laugh out loud funny. A riot of ludicrous latex outfits and hairdos to make you giggle. I found Will Ferrell and John Heder a good team as rival skaters having to compete together in the never previously seen male/male skating pair to regain gold medals after being disqualified for conduct unbecoming of athletes.

Will Ferrell is his usual buoyant obnoxious self as "sex on ice" whilst Jon Heder plays a skating prodigy with no experience of life. The 2 behave like toddlers in this less than subtle comedy but somehow there is chemistry between the two. This is a spoof (there are some excellent lines and hilarious references to the world of professional sport) and a slapstick comedy at the same time. The computer graphics "enable" the actors to undertake some amazing daring moves on the ice.

It's shiny and brash, and figure skating may seem even more boring after this movie, but it delivers a good dose of undemanding entertainment.

EXHIBITION REVIEW

Baskets Everywhere:
Oxfordshire Before Plastic

Display of baskets from the twentieth century at the Central Library, Westgate Centre.

Until Tue 1st May 2007: Mon, Fri & Sat 9am-5pm, Tues & Thurs 9am-7pm, closed Wed & Sun.

Take a look at the functional, robust and ergonomic baskets used in the early and late twentieth century. Buff willow lunch baskets and baskets used for cherry picking and shopping are on loan to enhance the display. The no-nonsense design of the willow receptacles looks strangely contemporary and offers gentle encouragement towards using natural resources and reusing one lunch container. These century-old baskets look like they still have a good day's work in them.

The exhibition links the artifacts with the local industry behind basket making. A photograph of a basket-making shop with proud workmen is included as are sketches of workers peeling osiers to provide white willow for basket making. Historic photographs, dated 1901, by Henry Taunt of men stripping willow for eel traps and tying willow into bolts in Upper Fisher Row are some of the treasures on show at this neat exhibition. One image shows a rare depiction of how Oxford's North Gate, top of Cornmarket Street, (an area now graced with the disposable world of take away food) looked before its partial demolition in 1771.

The diverse use of this natural resource is highlighted. A formal photograph of convalescing soldiers sitting in cane wheelchairs outside a General Hospital located on Cowley Road in 1916 is moving. A willow basket perched on a fish and chips delivery bicycle is cheering. This civilised, well-presented exhibition in neat glass cabinets is an excellent excuse to re-discover the always fascinating resources of the Centre For Oxfordshire Studies on the second floor of Oxford's Central Library.
