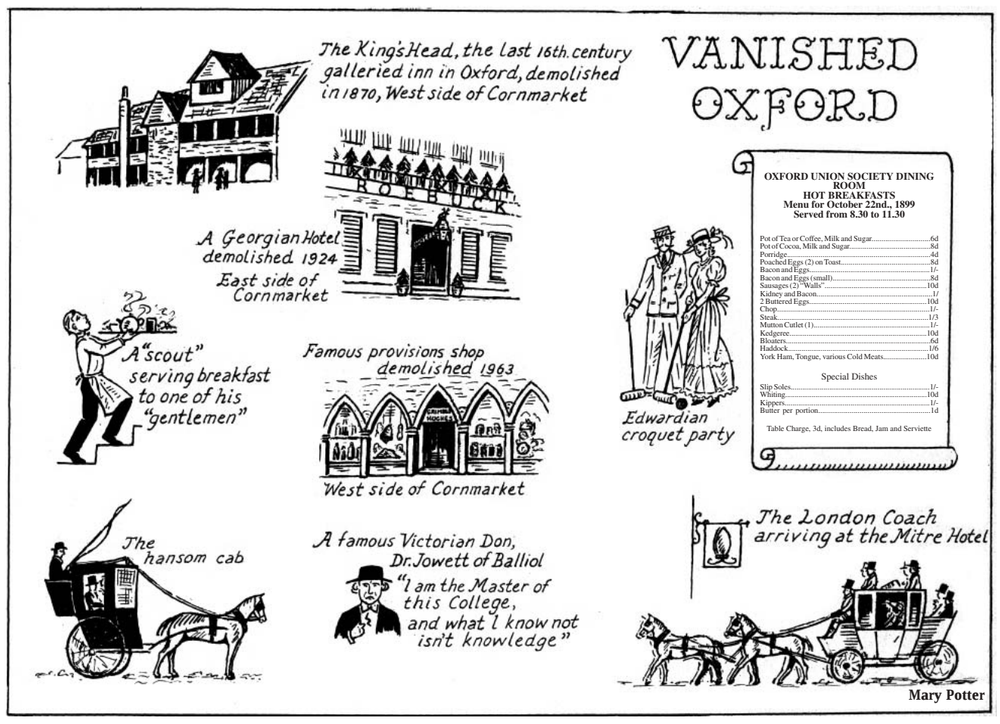
OXFORD INFORMATION



Vanished Oxford

1. Grimbly Hughes was the Fortnum & Mason's of Oxford - an epicure's delight. It emanated the fragrant aromas of teas, coffees and cheeses - just enough to be tempting!

2. Until after the first war, female undergraduates in some colleges were only allowed to have a man in their room for tea and buttered crumpet (!) provided they had the Dean's permission, were chaperoned by a female don and moved the bed into the corridor.

3. Some University rules operating until well after the second war:

I. All undergaduates' cars carried green identification lights, were not permitted to be parked in the streets overnight and were not allowed to be used in the mornings.

II. No drinking in pubs.

III. Written proctorial permission was required for all dances (we got round this by having "social evenings" with the dancing interrupted for a "statutory proctorial game" of "find the donkey's tail" or some such).

IIII. Dancing teachers were licensed by the University.

4. At least until 1953, attendance at chapel service at 8am every morning was compulsory - not so much to provide a congregation for the chaplain as to make sure we all got up at a reasonable time. Non-C of E members of college were just required to report at the chapel door.
