Kah-Ming Ng directs Charivari Agréable; he plays the harpsichord and he also introduces the pieces, giving you background on the composers, the music, the instruments and the period in an informative but gently humorous way. Through him we learn that the trio was the favourite has to say and that is difficult from the back of the chapel.

There were two pieces by Bach, the first a trio sonata for voice flute, baroque flute and harpsichord and the second a sonata for baroque flute and harpsichord, the latter rather an atypical piece for this composer. If you are used to conventional recordings of Bach, then you might think there will be no surprises in the music, but the instruments and the sounds they produce are truly surprising - and

The second piece, a Ciaccona by Pachelbel for harpsichord, has an interesting history. Ciaccona was apparently a very rude dance from Latin America which was shunned by REVIEW: CHARIVARI AGREABLE - EARLY MUSIC BY CANDLELIGHT A Sweet Concord of Winds: 10th July, 1st and 10th August Arrive early if you want to go to this concert of baroque polite society. It moved to the northern hemisphere and was still fairly raucous in Spain but got steadily more stately as it moved north. Pachelbel's Ciaccona leans towards the stately although reminders of its livelier past are still audible and Kah-Ming Ng's performance brings out all the subtle nuances. There were also two pieces by Vivaldi. The first was a concerto, but not in the form to which we are now accustomed (one soloist pitted against an orchestra - a form in baroque times, two equal voices and a bass. And form which was not known in the baroque period). It was here's another good reason to go early and get seats near a trio, with recorder, baroque oboe and harpsichord. The the front: it is certainly worth hearing what Kah-Ming Ng second piece, a sonata for baroque oboe and harpsichord (atypical for Vivaldi who wrote mostly for the violin) was perhaps my favourite piece of the evening, the lyrical music blending with the beautiful surroundings.

The Three Countertenors: "In the second half, matters lightened considerably. We opened with a pair of comic pieces by Couperin (suffering slightly from the echoey venue) and then moved on to a trio of popular songs by Porter, Weill and Gershwin, performed with clear and infectious enjoyment. This was particularly evident in I Got Rhythm where Rupert Griffin's genially physical performance raised some unexpected laughter."
