FILM REVIEW

THE SWEENEY [15]

“Get your trousers on, you’re nicked”.

So grows Ray Winstone in Nick Love's reboot of The Sweeney. Pick axe handles and a fistful of f-words go a long way for the Flying Squad as they crack crime and quite a few heads.

Jack Regan (Winstone) heads a team whose ruthless methods are targeted by internal affairs agent Ivan Lewis (Steven Mackintosh). When a series of bank jobs leads to an execution-style murder, Regan and partner George Carter (writer-rapper-director Ben Drew) will take no prisoners. But banging heads is one thing; banging Lewis' wife is another. So can Regan bring down the crims before his balls are broken by the bureaucrats?

Writer-director Nick Love (The Football Factory, Outlaw) clearly enjoyed the cult series: his pet project was on ice for several years until the funding came good. But is this brash refresh a worthy homage to the John Thaw-Dennis Waterman classic? Yes and no.

The camaraderie and 70s-style macho posturing is aptly nailed. But the Eastender accents and the torrent of effing - this is London, mate, innit? - get a bit wearing.

Today's London does look great though and The Sweeney updates the original's grey-and-grainy look with a classy palette for the twenty-first century. But the action's under-powered and at times unbelievable. An exciting shoot-out across Trafalgar Square, put in for the American market, incites the sudden thought: 'why are the Flying Squad such crap shots?'
