Most of the buildings in the city centre have cellars, and a large number have been converted into bars or restaurants.

The family of T.E. Lawrence ('Lawrence of Arabia') lived in Polstead Road. Lawrence's own little bungalow, which stands at the bottom of the garden, has sometimes been advertised to let in Daily Information under the rather surprising description: "Secluded cottage with breakfast". As well as the escapade with the canoe he once masterminded a plan to steal Magdalen's deer for his own college, All Souls', but fortunately it was never carried out.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Pierre Victoire
9 Little Clarendon Street. OX1 2HP
Telephone: 01865 316616
Pierre Victoire is one of my favourite Oxford restaurants, but I had managed not to get there in about five years, so - having seen the mixed reviews on our site - I thought it was high time I returned to investigate.
The venue isn't large (though on two floors), and they do cram the tables in, and there's nowhere to hang your coat - but the decor is charmingly rustic, with scrubbed pine tables and cartoonish paintings of waiting staff on the walls, and the staff really are French (including our chef, according to the printed specials menu). There are fresh flowers and candles on all the little tables, your little basket of complimentary fresh bread and beurre arrives almost instantly, service is efficient, smiley and non-intrusive - and if you listen hard you can just make out the accordion-based background music. The place has a lively, unpretentious character, and it looks like it's kept its founder Pierre Levicky's initial aims close to its heart: produce good quality, simple French food at a low cost, and you will stay busy. Alongside the reasonably priced à la carte menu there is a good range of dining deals to suit almost everyone: Fondue Savoyarde for two for £9.90 each; a 'pre-theatre' dinner of two courses and coffee for £9.90; prix fixe of three courses and coffee for £19.50; a lunch deal for under ten pounds, a 'late supper' ... and so on.

We had starters of pigeon breast and deep fried goats cheese respectively, followed by monkfish risotto and a roasted veg, spinach and gruyere buckwheat crepe ("Galette de Sarrasin") and finally a rum and sweet chestnut cheesecake. The fish and fowl were cooked well, the three tiny slivers of pigeon having the right amount of pinkness in the middle, and arriving accompanied by a topsy-turvy little stack of sweet, squidgy parsnip logs, the gravy providing moistness in a pleasant, unremarkable way. The monkfish was as satisfyingly meaty as you'd expect, the rice al dente and delicately flavoured. The goat's cheese was a nice wide slice of log, its crust crispy and light rather than excessively greasy, its accompaniment of dark cherries saving it from the overpowering richness normally associated with the dish. Similarly, the crepe (an experimental choice, as roasted veg often arrives far too oily) was delicious and just right, not greasy or heavy despite its cheese topping - perhaps due to the high spinach content. Whilst pleasantly full after this (plus a bottle of Perrier, two Merlots and a Pinot grigio), we risked the cheesecake to share, which also failed to be too sweet, too heavy or too cloying by virtue of its light base, slightly grainy texture and almost savoury combination of rum and chestnut - deliciously light, and the perfect amount for us to have a taster with our coffee. The only failing, it must be said, is that the wine list is rather poor for a good restaurant, let alone a French one. New World wines are abundant, but the only French red on offer by the glass was the house, which the waiter helpfully warned against (thank heaven for staff honesty!) It never hurts to ask. They would do well to stick a few interesting French bin-ends on there (and given that Oddbins is next door, it's particularly odd that they don't). Also, it's a shame there are shakers rather than salt and pepper mills on the tables... are such items really that thiefworthy these days?!
