ssdp students for sensible drug policy

The 'War on Drugs' has failed in its own terms. Despite increasing criminal sanctions, the number of drug users has continued to rise for decades. Our courts and prisons are clogged with otherwise law-abiding people, vast sums of money are flowing into organised crime, allowing violent cartels to destabilise whole countries, while our government, desperate to appear tough on drugs, is refusing to listen to its own Advisory Council or consider any alternative policies to the counterproductive status quo.

A growing number of people now believe that prohibition is a worse problem than the drugs it seeks to eliminate.

Here's your chance to be part of the solution.

SSDP is an international grassroots student organisation, campaigning for problematic drug use to be treated humanely and rationally, as a medical, rather than a criminal issue, and calling for control of the drug trade to be taken out of the hands of gangsters. If you want to help set up a branch at Oxford University or Oxford Brookes, please email david.hart@ssdp.org.uk.

THEATRE REVIEW

New Road Baptist Church, Fri April 17th - Sat May 30th. See Theatre listings, below left.

Creation Theatre, now entering its teens, has had a rough time of it with the squally, horrid summers that Oxford has suffered over the last two years. Thus, its venues for 2009 all include seating areas of one kind or another shielded from the elements, and the season begins in the proud old Baptist church in the newly spruced-up Bonn Square. Nothing could be more expressive of an evolving, vital, Oxford that is so proud of its history, but also aware of a need to adapt and change in order to survive and stay relevant.

The venue as arranged for the production is reminiscent of Stratford's under-dustsheets Swan: a thrust-stage is surrounded by seats, but those that are to be prized lie at the front of an upper gallery. One can't forget the building is a church, with a huge cross above the stage, splintered at the edges, bedecked with a crumpled, intricate crown-of-thorns. As a non-dedicated venue, somewhere more suitable for Shakespeare could not be imagined, barring perhaps the Banqueting House at Whitehall where Othello premiered in front of James I in 1604.

One is always struck when a Shakespeare production does not begin with strident speech. Both parts of Creation's Othello, by contrast, kick-off with balletic moments of physical theatre, which recurr at times to move the action of the play along. These take the edge, somewhat, off the play's exploration of human motivations and passions, by adding a narrative bookending that screams 'this is theatre' in a way that may suit many plays in the Shakespeare canon in many playhouses, but is perhaps not quite so fitting for Othello in an eighteenth-century church. This over- theatricality is somewhat added to by the production: a play whose core setting is the heart of a Southern European polity is dressed up in the clothes and gestures of twentieth-century fascism. Is Iago meant to be Mussolini and Othello Abyssinia, or is it just a convenient, and all too fitting, mise en scène?

Rhys King as Roderigo is a little overemphatic with the lines that spark off the play, especially coming, as they do, after the danced introduction. He soon recovers, however, and he and the rest of the (improbably beautiful) company mostly do very well with the verse, and the often complicated blocking. Iago and Emilia are played by Richard Kidd and Caroline Devlin as stolid Yorkshire, in contrast to the exotic, occasionally too frantic, Othello of Victor Power, and the Desdemona-as-debutante ably brought off by Ffion Jolly. The intensity of these regional accents comes and goes, but it is easy to believe that this can be explained by Iago, early on, presenting himself as a simple, salt-of-the-earth, soldier, and Emilia, when she comes to be the final judge and arbiter of the whole tragic, bloody, fate of the ensemble, speaking a truth that is otherwise absent from all but the most conniving of the play's other discourses. Even in Venetian Cyprus there is something reassuringly authentic and all-pervading about a northern accent.
