FILM REVIEW

WATER FOR ELEPHANTS [12A]

Francis (I am Legend) Lawrence's film of Sara Gruen's bestseller has it all: star actors, an epic director, and an award-winning trio of cinematographer, designer and costumer.

It is set under the Big Top of Benzini Brothers' colourful travelling circus in pre-Depression 1931 America, where the charismatic founder August (Christoph Waltz) struggles to balance the books. His orphaned, pert, plucky wife Marlena (Reese Witherspoon) is his 'star attraction', the show-stopping headliner and key revenue stream.

His beautiful wife owes everything to him, and appears content to put up with unpredictable outbursts of sadistic violence - but this is not all August is capable of. As the steam train rattles through the night to the next town, August's sinister cost-cutting enforcers prowl the train, targeting superfluous employees to throw off.

Enter Jacob (Robert Pattinson), running away from personal tragedy to board the circus train. The loss of his parents in an automobile accident has resulted in financial destitution, and the abandonment of his final year of veterinary medicine at Cornell University. He skillfully negotiates carriage tuggery, proving his veterinary skills indispensable to the treacherous and mercurial boss- and plunging us into a compelling narrative amongst caged wild animals.

Jacob's attraction to Marlena glitters in Witherspoon's sequins and August's watchful eyes. However, the real chemistry is not between the forbidden lovers, but between Jacob and another new arrival- Rosie the elephant. Pattinson's tangible affection for and protection of the pachyderm is a joy to watch. But both of Jacob's loves are targets of August's violence.

Unlikely ménages à trois abound: Jacob, Marlena and August (dared on by the latter); Jacob, Marlena and Rosie (she rides both
