REVIEW: RESTAURANT

LIVEBAIT, 16 Turl Street Tel. 324930

Oxford's third major fish restaurant recently opened in Turl Street, at the corner with Ship Street. Livebait offers a sophisticated menu, with daily specials, as well as traditional fish and chips in batter with mushy peas (or 'pea puree' in twenty-first century menu-speak). It is worth noting that apart from a warm goat's cheese salad everything on the menu here is fish of one kind or another, so make sure your companions are all happy with that if you visit Livebait.

The character of the building means that there are effectively three different parts to the restaurant. On the ground floor there is a cocktail bar, and the main restaurant is upstairs - rather dark, my companion thought, and functionally if stylishly furnished. We had what seemed to us the best table, by the window, overlooking the gardens of Jesus College. Our favourite part, which we only discovered at the end of the meal is a club-like basement, with deep sofas and armchairs, as well as one or two tables where a meal can be eaten, lying on a sofa Roman-Style - something which can be done nowhere else in Oxford. It is an excellent place for coffee and/or dessert, and also a place where smokers can dine.

As for the food, it falls mainly into three categories: a large selection of shellfish; basic fish pan-fried or char-grilled with sauces; and made-up dishes with a

RECRUITMENT OPEN DAY
OXFORD PROTEIN PRODUCTION FACILITY
Saturday 8th September, 10am - 1pm
POST GRADUATE, POSTDOCTORAL AND SENIOR SCIENTISTS

Opportunities exist for recent and experienced graduate, postdoctoral and senior scientists to join this innovative and exciting new MRC funded programme dedicated to the creation of a high throughput protein production facility to feed structural and functional genomic research. This is the first stage in a structural genomics programme, for the UK, which represents an essential stepping stone to the practical exploitation of the human genome for improved healthcare.
There will be many opportunities for scientific interaction and the continued personal development of scientific skills for the successful candidates. If working in this facility sounds of interest you are invited to attend an informal open day.

REVIEW: RESTAURANT

LA GOUSSE D'AIL

268 Woodstock Road, Oxford. OX2 7NW
Telephone: 311936
email: info@lagoussedail.co.uk

My companion, being a carnivore, found herself rather more spoilt for choice. The salad component of the salade of roasted quail and cèpes in Madeira jus may only have consisted of a forlorn cluster of haricots verts; but the large morsels of quail were sweet and exquisitely tender, their flavour not overwhelmed by the delicate sauce. Praise also for the Crisp Gressingham Duck, with Roasted Purple Figs and Foie Gras, in a Sauce Epice. The succulent pieces of duck, though excellent - its skin slightly crisp on the outside, and not at all oily - were in many ways eclipsed by the figs: dark and velvety, cooked until they simply melted in the mouth. The foie gras was perhaps a treat, considering the richness of the flesh and the slightly cloying sauce.

Pudding continued the theme of small parcels of intense flavour, the only exception to the rule being the prune and armagnac soufflé, which could have done with a touch more armagnac to complement its majestic appearance. The trio of lemon featured an extremely good lemon tart with fromage blanc and a strikingly complementary carrot cake; and ingeniously served in the skin of a lemon; and a frozen chiboust. Perhaps the greatest sensual delight of the evening came from the cheese board (or rather trolley - no paucity of choice here) whose aroma could be quite overpowering even when placed several tables away.

Some diners might find the restaurant's high ceilings rather intimidating, especially if the place is quite empty - it is disconcertingly easy to hear the conversations taking place on neighbouring tables. The service, though excellent, can be somewhat disorientating: we were served by at least five different staff, all dressed differently. Nevertheless La Gousse D'Ail is, in many ways, an exceptional dining experience, and one for which it is worth making the journey up the Woodstock Road.
