Restoration

Lord Are is penniless and in search of a rich wife, whilst Mr Hardache's spoilt daughter is in search of a title and country estate. But the marriage is not a happy one and Lady Are seeks revenge by dressing up as a ghost to haunt her husband. Lord Are is more taken aback than Lady Are could have hoped for and stabs what he thinks to be a phantom in the heart. He then attempts to frame his honest servant Bob for the crime and a moral dilemma ensues.

Living up to their name, the Headlong Theatre Company approach the script with speed and vigour. The pace is quick and the laughs frequent, with an abundance of wittily delivered snubs and clever quips. The RADA-trained Mark Lockyer plays a flamboyant Lord Are, brimming with ostentation and bravado, the size of his aristocratic wig matching the size of his aristocratic ego. Beverly Klein makes a very good corpse-of-Lady-Are in the farcical murder scene, her limp body being stood up, sat down, stood up again, joggled whemently and dropped in a heap. Underlying the comedy however is an uncomfortable truth a bitter struggle against cruelly and oppression which becomes more potent as the audience realise they are laughing at the tragic.

Nonetheless, Restoration is a rip-roaringly funny play with a dark undertow, and the Headlong Theatre Company certainly put a good face on it, filling the evening with wit, woe and wonderful

Oxford Playhouse

Until Sat 7th October 2006

Pompous aristocrats, greedy noblemen and grotesque wigs. Intrigued? The Oxford Playhouse stages Edward Bond's 1981 Restoration: a play that portrays the gluttony of the rich and the strife of the poor.

The rampant tempo however was not entirely sustained. The production's slow solemn songs seemed to sit uneasily and interrupt the pace. This was not helped by the opportunistic scene changes, which took place while the singer was illuminated and the back of the stage in 'darkness' At some points the backstage crewmembers seemed almost to upstage the actors.

CINEMA REVIEW

The Queen [12A]

We have been to see the Queen - the current much-rave-reviewed film with Helen Mirren, not the Buckingham Palace reality.

The Outer is a reconstruction of the life of the Royal Family during the election of Tony Blair for the first time (interesting that we think of it in that way, not the first term of the current government), closely followed by the death of Diana - the first ex-HRH to require a funeral -therefore an occasion with no precedent.

therefore an occasion with no precedent.

The Queen, along with her husband Prince Philip (Mowe over cabbage' he says, as he bounds into bed), her mother (also addressed as Malam to thyme with ham no marm to hymme with farm as Blair is informed by a flunky) and Prince Charles,
are portrayed as an endearingly dysfunctional family throughout the crisis. The young princes are wisely kep in the background - in fact we only ever see their back view. This struggling family is mercilessly exploited by an amoral Alastair Campbell and a Blair who oscillates between his hunger for power and his occasional attack of decency (a disability not shared by his wife).

The death of Diana is stalked, as it were, by a stag with symbol written all over it - nevertheless a beautiful creature whose relationship with the Queen is somewhat touching.

Queen is somewhat touching. Essentially, my friend and I agreed, this is a film about taste - by which we mean the relationship between values and sentimentality, between dignity and mass hysteria, between duty and feeling. I would have preferred it, he said, if they had made it a bit funnier. Yes, but the funny bits were funny. We now need a film about the Royal Essentimental Sentiment Sentim Family watching this...
