RESTAURANT REVIEW

451235 gnome@cerbernet.co.uk

Edamamé Tues-Sat 11.30-14.30 15 Holywell Street

Tucked away on Holywell Street, opposite New College, Edamamé is a tiny Japenese restaurant hidden in the middle of a residential terrace. It blends the styles of "katei ryori" (home cooking) restaurants and "izakaya" bars and, on Friday and Saturday evenings, offers a dinner menu of around thirty dishes, very reasonably priced between £1-

Vegetarians are well catered for, but the menu includes several meat dishes and, of course, a variety of fish and seafood items. Somewhat inexperienced in Japanese cuisine, my companion and I selected a mixture of dishes to share, tapas style. We chose the special, sashimi, raw salmon served with wasabi and shredded mooli (£6), shogayaki (stir-fried strips of pork loin marinated in soy and ginger, £5), yasai itame (stir-fried oriental vegetables, £4.50), edamame (boiled Japanese soy beans, £2.50), miso soup and rice

The dishes came in waves. First, the edamame which came in their pods ready to be popped, swiftly followed by the rice and salmon. The latter was extremely fresh, and dipped in the accompanying wasabi mixed with soy sauce was a delicious delicacy which my companion claimed she could "eat all day". Whilst savouring the salmon, our other dishes arrived. The stir-fried vegetables included beansprouts, carrots and babycorn – fresh and simple. The pork was the only let down, somewhat reminiscent of bacon and not sufficiently gingery for our taste. I enjoyed an Asahi lager (£2) whilst my companion chose sake (£3) but there are also shotchu (spirits) and choya (Japanese plum wine) on offer.

The restaurant space itself is spare, packed with tables and stools, and simply decorated with mirrors and bamboo blinds. Despite its diminutive size, however, it doesn't feel unduly cramped (though be prepared to share a table). There are no reservations so you may have to wait 5 or 10 minutes for a table. Although these factors along with the opening hours don't make Edamamé an obvious choice for an intimate meal for two, the high quality of the food and the friendly service make it an attractive option for an early evening Total bill for two including drinks: £27.60 (+

10% surcharge for cards). Mark Schofield 2
